

This pre-war building was the principle wet market for Kuala Lumpur in the early years. It was extensively renovated in the 1980's into an arts and cultural center. It has become the place for local artists to demonstrate their skills and display their work.

There are numerous shops and stalls that sell bric-a-brac, antiques, souvenirs, handicrafts and Asian artifacts. An open-air stage serves as the regular venue for traditional and contemporary dance, as well as musical concerts. The Central Market is just a stone's throw from the Klang Bus Station and is situated immediately behind the Dayabumi building. Hours of operation are from 10:00 am to 10:00 pm.
