

Kuala Lumpur's most photographed building, designed by British Architect A.C. Norman, was built between 1894 and 1897. It was formerly the Secretariat building for the British Administration.

The structure is a beautiful blend of Victorian and Moorish architecture and now holds Malaysia's Supreme Court and the High Court. Just next to the Sultan Abdul Samad Building is the former City Hall, a similar Moorish-styled building.

Phoca PDF